RESEARCH In a study published in the Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, researchers from the University of California, San Diego, and the University of Colorado at Boulder found that children with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) who were treated with methylphenidate (Ritalin) had significantly higher levels of self-esteem than those who were not treated. The study, which was conducted over a period of 12 weeks, found that the children who were treated with methylphenidate had significantly higher levels of self-esteem than those who were not treated. The researchers concluded that the treatment of ADHD with methylphenidate can lead to improved self-esteem in children.
