RESEARCHERS have found that the more people know about a disease, the more likely they are to get it. This is because people who know more about a disease are more likely to believe that they are at risk of getting it. This is a common mistake. RESEARCHERS have shown that the use of a computerized system to monitor and control the environment of a hospital can reduce the risk of infection. The system, called the Hospital Infection Control System (HICS), was developed by researchers at the University of Michigan and the University of California, San Francisco. It was used in a study of 100 patients in a hospital ward. The results showed that the use of HICS reduced the risk of infection by 50% compared to the control group. The researchers concluded that the use of HICS could be a valuable tool for reducing the risk of infection in hospitals.
